Back Up Your Genealogy Files!

It is the first of the month. It's time to back up your genealogy files. Then test your backups!
Actually, you can make backups at any time. However, it is easier and safer if you have a specific schedule. The first day of the month is easy to remember, so I would suggest you back up your genealogy files at least on the first day of every month, if not more often. Of course, you might want to back up more than your genealogy files. Family photographs, your checkbook register, all sorts of word processing documents, email messages, and much more need to be backed up regularly. Why not do that on the first day of each month?
How Many Backup Copies of Important Files Do You Need?

Here’s the old data center 3-2-1 rule-of-thumb for backing up:

- 3 copies of anything you care about - Two isn't enough if it's important.
- 2 different formats - Example: Dropbox plus DVDs or Hard Drive plus Memory Stick or CD plus Crash Plan, or more
- 1 off-site backup - If the house burns down, how will you get your memories back?

Why Video for Genealogy?

Participants will learn how video engages viewers and brings family history to life. A short video about an ancestor's story can help share genealogy research with family members who may not be "genealogically inclined."

Topics covered include:

- how to quickly brainstorm ancestor story ideas,
- storyboarding a video using available images,
- sources of public domain images to augment your story
- putting together a finished video using free or low-cost editing tools,
- ways to share videos with family members and encourage dialog.

Civil War Facial Recognition

Photography was a new technology at the time of the U.S. Civil War. An estimated 40 million photos were taken during the Civil war - although only four million are believed to remain today. Many have been treated as heirloom photos by families ever since. Still others are valuable for their historical value. One problem is that many of the people shown in the old photographs have never been identified, until now.

In a marriage of the latest technology and 150-year-old technology, computerized facial recognition techniques are now identifying many of the people in the old photographs.
Computer scientist and history buff Kurt Luther created a free-to-use website, called Civil War Photo Sleuth, that uses facial recognition technology to cross-reference vintage photographs with a database and hopefully assign a name to unknown subjects. Anyone may upload their own photographs or select from the many photographs that are already available online, such as photos from the U.S. National Archives and Records Administration's web site. The software in the Civil War Photo Sleuth web site then maps as many as 27 "facial landmarks" on each photograph. Once it finishes cross-referencing, the site will serve up a slate of closely similar photographs that already have names attached.

For any one photo, the web site often identifies a number of potential candidates, rather than just one. In that case, humans have to compare the photographs of potential candidates to identify the correct person, if possible.

Xmas Was Different Half A Century Ago
---------------------------------------
Was Not as Generally Observed as Now and Customs Have Widely Changed in Last 50 Years
---------------------------------------
WHO WILL SAY IT IS BETTER?

(By Tom M. Morgan)

Christmas fifty years ago was not like it is today - that is, the day was observed differently, when it was observed all. Santa Claus existed then, just as he does today, but he did not have such a wide circle of those who depended on him to serve them with presents.

Very few people in those days erected a Christmas tree in their homes and such a function in a church would have shocked the lank-haired puritans of that time - for it was in those days that some very learned men preached of a place that seethed with fire and brimstone, and to have desecrated a church with a Christmas tree would have been the primary stop on the way to that hot place where a personage with cloven foot and long spike tail made it hot for all those who had gone other than in the narrow way during life.

In very few families then stocking were hung up on Christmas eve. Of course some families observed this custom, but the practice was not general as it is today. Old Santa task on Christmas eve at that remote time was but a little errand compared with what it is at the present time. His reindeer were the same then as today and bore the same names - Dancer and Prancer - and he skipped about the world in his sleigh just as he does now, but he made fewer stops. He did not deliver the same kind of presents then as he does today. Where he did call he usually left a few wooden toys, painted in most exciting colors - in fact, no such animals ever existed except in Old Santa's menagerie - some "barber-pole" candy and occasionally some fortunate little girl got a wax doll whose head melted off the first time it was left too near the fire.

Fire Crackers For Boys

Sometimes a boy would get a bunch of fire crackers and few little tricks such as a Jew's harp, top or tin horn. But a large majority of the children did not get anything, for as remarked in the foregoing Santa was not so well known as he is today and the practice of present-making was not universal. About the only sweetmeats a large proportion of the children received in the small towns and many of the cities was stick candy given to them as they ran from place to place on Christmas morning and shouted "Christmas gift" to the merchants and shop keepers. Sometimes, however, young women who had a sweetheart who was really in earnest got a large candy apple, peach or pear as a reminder that some one was really interested in them. One of the earliest memories of the writer relative to Christmas is the desire he had to eat a large candy apple, much larger than any that ever grew on a tree, that had been received by a young woman. He recalls, too, how rich he imagined the man was who made that young woman a present of such precious gift, and though very young - mentally planned how he would give the girl he loved a candy apple on Christmas when he grew to be as large as his father.

Many Play Pranks

Some parents insisted that Santa would not find the stockings if these were not hung on the outside of the house, the children being told that he was such a fat old fellow that he could not get down the chimney. This practice, where it was observed, caused many pranks to be played on those who hung their hosiery outside the door. Not infrequently all that would be found in them in the morning were chips, rocks and a great variety of trash that had been picked up by mischievous boys and girls - yes, girls sometimes played Santa and helped fool some trusting boy or girls who had remained awake as long as possible in hope of hearing old Santa when he crept up to the door to fill their stockings with all kinds of hoped-for things.

Dance Affords Pleasure

Christmas Day, too, was not observed in those days as it is today. It is true many of the older inhabitants made turkey carcasses look like scant picking after they had given it a Christmas turn. The young people frequently had a dance on Christmas night were a one-man orchestra with a three-dollar fiddle furnished the music and the dancing was confined to quadrilles - the waltz not having become popular at that time. On occasions like these, the fiddler put in the entire night playing such tunes as "Soapsuds Over the Fence," "The Belle Cow," "Moneymusk," "Arkansaw Traveler," Tim Finnegan's Wake," "Hell on the Wabash" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me." These were not dances either where the young people hopped around for an hour or two, going through a few "fancy figures" and then repaired to some convenient place for supper. In those days it was dance all night, 'till broad daylight and go home with the girls in the morning.

Boys Take to Ice

Children had their Christmas frolics too. The lad who had a pair of skates usually took to the ice, if he lived in a country where ice was plentiful at that season of the year, or if he was a town boy and did not own a pair of skates, he put in the day firing fire cracks, turning "devil catchers" loose in some unsuspecting crowd or exploding small torpedoes just for the fun of hearing the noise. Little girls popped corn or made little trips about the neighborhood to tell about the fun they had the night before at blind man's bluff [sic] or playing tricks on some one who hung a stocking outside the door.

Shooting Match Has Place

Those who did not movie in the social circles of the times, or preferred to be out with the "boys" sometimes had great sport at a shooting match where real live turkeys were put up, the best marksmen taking a larger share of the birds as a result of their prowess.

On Christmas eve, just to inform every one that the real day would come with sunrise the next day, it was the custom in many localities to get anvils from some blacksmith shop and fire them at intervals until late in the night. The first detonation from an anvil was a sure enough signal that Christmas was on schedule time and would arrive the following morning.

Of course the practice of present-making was observed in those days but not so universally as it is today. Parents usually selected Christmas as the day to given their daughters each a gold watch, or to get a pair of red-topped, copper-toes boots for the youngest son in the family who happened to be approaching that age when his parents thought he should have his first boots and begin to realize that he was getting to be a "big boy."

Long Sermons Rule

In localities where the religious significance of the day was observed, a large per cent of the inhabitants met at the neighborhood church and listened to a discourse of two hours duration or longer on such a text "As in Adam All Die, Even So in Christ Shall All Be Made Alive Again." Some of the memories that still find a place in the writer's mind are of how hungry he got on one or two occasions when some really pious minister of the old school apparently forgot that it was part of the command to eat and be merry, and spun his discourse out over two hours or more.

Dull By Comparison

By comparison with today the Christmas of the old says may seem dull to those who get so much pleasure out of the event today. But the joys of life are a relative something and appeal to people from the angle at which they touch the world and the social atmosphere in which they move. While the Christmas time of a half century ago was not so full of preparation as it is today, and while the people did not go to such extremes in trying to remember all their friends, it had its joys and was a step toward that time the world is slowly approaching when there will be job enough to go round. The manner of observing the Christmas tide may seem crude, but the people were just as happy then in their homespun, in proportion to their opportunity to be so, as the residents of Christendom are today.
